

Youth Referred to Family Court

DEFINITION

Youth referred to Family Court is the percentage of youth ages 10 to 17 referred to Rhode Island Family Court for wayward or delinquent offenses.

SIGNIFICANCE

Individual, family, peer, school, and community risk factors (such as learning disabilities, poverty, maltreatment and abuse, family violence, and exposure to crime) can increase a young person's risk of juvenile delinquency and involvement in the juvenile justice system. An increased number of risk factors and length of exposure can increase a young person's likelihood of involvement, but protective factors, treatment programs, and interventions can prevent involvement.¹

The Rhode Island Family Court has jurisdiction over children and youth under age 18 referred for wayward and delinquent offenses. When a police or school department refers a youth to Family Court, a petition is submitted accompanied by an incident report detailing the alleged violation of law.² During 2023, 2,406 youth (2% of Rhode Island youth between the ages of 10 and 17) were referred to Family Court, up from 1,477 youth during 2020 and 2,084 youth during 2022. The number of offenses referred during 2023 (4,696) also increased, just surpassing the number of offenses prior to the COVID-19 pandemic (4,630). Of the juvenile offenses in 2023, 185 (4%) involved violent crimes.^{3,4}

In 2023 in Rhode Island, 19% of juvenile offenses referred to Family Court involved youth from Providence, 26% involved youth from the other three core cities, and 56% involved youth living in the remainder of the state.⁵

Using risk and needs assessments can reduce racial and ethnic bias in juvenile justice sanctions and better predict a youth's likelihood to reoffend than a justice official's professional judgment.⁶ Of the youth referred to the Family Court in 2023, 73% were referred for the first time, 15% had been referred once before, and 12% had been referred at least twice before.⁷

Research shows that incarcerating youth is costly and leads to worse public safety outcomes and higher recidivism rates than community-based alternatives.⁸ Community-based programs that involve youth and their families and connect youth to role models, education, and resources prevent entry into the juvenile justice system and recidivism better than those that emphasize punishment, discipline, and consequences. Programming must balance adolescents' burgeoning independence, connection to positive peer relationships, and ongoing need for parental guidance.⁹

★ The number of juvenile offenses referred to the Family Court in 2023 (4,696) surpassed pre-pandemic levels (4,630 in 2019). The number of juvenile offenses decreased by 45% from 2019 to 2020 but has steadily increased since the COVID-19 pandemic.¹⁰

★ Youth of Color are disproportionately referred to the Family Court compared to their representation in the youth population. For example, in 2023, 27% of referred offenses involved Black youth who only make up 6% of the Rhode Island child population.^{11,12}

★ In 2023, 32% of offenses referred to the Family Court involved female youth and 68% male youth. In 2023, 22% of offenses referred to Family Court involved youth under the age of 14, 36% youth ages 14 to 15, 42% youth ages 16 to 17, and less than 1% of youth of other ages.¹³

Alternatives to Incarceration for Juvenile Offenders in Rhode Island

★ Juvenile courts have a wide range of options for handling juvenile offenders, including restitution, community service, revocation of driving privileges, counseling, substance abuse treatment, and probation.¹⁴ In 2023 in Rhode Island, 35% of all cases referred to Family Court were diverted instead of proceeding to a formal court hearing, down from 51% in 2022.^{15,16}

★ The Rhode Island Family Court administers several alternatives to traditional court hearings, including the Truancy Court and the Juvenile Drug Court. In 2023, 1,287 youth were referred to the Truancy Court by schools, a 49% increase from 2022. In 2023, 126 youth who committed drug offenses or had highlighted drug issues were diverted to the Juvenile Drug Court pre-adjudication.^{17,18}

Community-Based Diversion in Rhode Island

★ A community-based option that diverts youth from court involvement is the Juvenile Hearing Board (JHB). Comprised of volunteer community members, JHBs permit the diversion of youth accused of lower-level offenses, including status offenses and misdemeanors. Youth who complete sanctions, such as community service, restitution, and counseling, are often able to avoid having a court record following this process.¹⁹

★ In 2023, there were 35 Juvenile Hearing Boards in Rhode Island. Four communities did not have Juvenile Hearing Boards (Little Compton, Richmond, North Kingstown and South Kingstown). Rhode Island Juvenile Hearing Boards reported hearing 276 cases involving 300 offenses in 2023.²⁰ In 2023, 59% of youth referred to JHBs were white, 24% were Hispanic, 17% were Black, and <1% were Asian. Almost half (47%) of all offenses were for disorderly conduct, and 21% were for simple assault. Other offenses included drugs/alcohol (8%), malicious damage (6%), weapon possession (6%), shoplifting (4%), status offenses (1%), larceny/stolen goods (1%), trespassing (2%), and other offenses (5%).

Age of Jurisdiction for Family Court

★ The Rhode Island Family Court is responsible for all referrals for wayward and delinquent offenses committed by youth under age 18. Unless discharged previously, these youth will remain under the jurisdiction of the Family Court until they reach age 19.²¹

★ Developmentally, young children are unable to understand court proceedings and participate meaningfully in their defense. They are also more likely to experience trauma through the court process and physical harm if sentenced to custody. Rhode Island is one of 24 states that currently has no minimum age of jurisdiction for Family Court. In New England, Connecticut, Massachusetts, New Hampshire and Vermont have laws that set a minimum age for children to be tried in juvenile court. Research suggests that setting a minimum age of jurisdiction at age 14 would be developmentally appropriate and in the best interest of children, especially Children of Color.^{22,23}

★ Behavioral research shows that adolescents are less able than adults to weigh risks and consequences and to resist peer pressure. Their judgment and decision-making skills are still developing. As the adolescent brain continues to develop, most youth offenders will stop breaking the law. Michigan, New York, and Vermont have now raised the age of jurisdiction for juvenile court to include young people who are age 18. Vermont's law will continue to raise the age so that in 2024 all young people up to age 20 will be referred to juvenile court with exceptions for certain violent offenses.^{24,25}

★ Because the developmental needs of youth are different than adults, youth involved in the adult court and justice system are at risk for abuse, suicide, and prolonged experiences in solitary confinement. In Rhode Island, youth interact with the adult correctional system in two ways—when they are “waived” to adult court at the request of the Rhode Island Attorney General or when they are “certified” resulting in sentencing beyond age 19 and transfer from the Training School to the Adult Correctional Institutions upon reaching age 19. In 2023, nine motions to waive jurisdiction to try juveniles as adults and nine certification motions were filed. Six waiver motions were pending at the end of 2023, and four motions to certify were certified.^{26,27,28}
